bringing together studies of archaeological method and analysis with detailed work of historical interpretation the papers here demonstrate how analysis informed by multiple disciplines sheds new light on such important topics as the end of antiquity the so called byzantine dark ages the contours of the emerging byzantine civilization and the complex character of identity in post medieval greece more broadly this volume shows how the study of the material culture of post classical greece has made significant contributions to both the larger archaeological and historical discourse this revised edition of dr neville a ritchie s 1986 phd dissertation explores the history and archaeology of the 19th century chinese mining communities in the clutha valley new zealand lavishly illustrated with black and white line drawings of chinese domestic and industrial sites and of the artefacts excavated from them this study offers unprecedented insight into the life and material culture of these male only sojourner communities widely considered the most comprehensive archaeological study of overseas chinese miners experience anywhere in the world this volume contains the total summation and analysis of artefacts found in 23 chinese sites excavated over nine years which included two camps with 40 individual huts and other features a chinese store and 20 rural sites including miner s huts and rock shelters considered by the australian society for historical archaeology to be a seminal work in the field of historical archaeology this 2023 edition introduces dr ritchie s groundbreaking work to the next generation of archaeologists in studying the past archaeologists have focused on the material remains of our ancestors prehistorians generally have only artifacts to study and rely on the diverse material record for their understanding of past societies and their behavior those involved in studying historically documented cultures not only have extensive material remains but also contemporary texts images and a range of investigative technologies to enable them to build a broader and more reflexive picture of how past societies communities and individuals operated and behaved increasingly historical archaeology refers not to a particular period place or a method but rather an approach that interrogates the tensions between artifacts and texts irrespective of context in short historical archaeology provides direct evidence for how humans have shaped the world we live in today historical archaeology is a branch of global archaeology that has grown in the last 40 years from its north american base into an increasingly global community of archaeologists each studying their area of the world in a historical context where historical archaeology started as part of the study of the post columbian societies of the united states and canada it has now expanded to interface with the post medieval archaeologies of europe and the diverse post imperial experiences of africa latin america and australasia the 36 essays in the international handbook of historical archaeology have been specially commissioned from the leading researchers in their fields creating a wide ranging digest of the increasingly global field of historical archaeology the volume is divided into two sections the first reviewing the key themes issues and approaches of historical archaeology today and the second containing a series of case studies charting the development and current state of historical archaeological practice around the world this key reference work captures the energy and diversity of this global discipline today this book explores the development of territorial identity in the late prehistoric roman and early medieval periods over the course of the iron age a series of marked regional variations in material culture and landscape character emerged across eastern england that reflect the development of discrete zones of social and economic interaction the boundaries between these zones appear to have run through sparsely settled areas of the landscape on high ground and corresponded to a series of kingdoms that emerged during the late iron age in eastern england at least these pre roman socio economic territories appear to have survived throughout the roman period despite a trend towards cultural homogenization brought about by romanization although there is no direct evidence for the relationship between these socio economic zones and the roman administrative territories known as civitates they probably corresponded very closely the fifth century saw some anglo saxon immigration but whereas in east anglia these communities spread out across much of the landscape in the northern thames basin they appear to have been restricted to certain coastal and estuarine districts the remaining areas continued to be occupied by a substantial native british population including much of the east saxon kingdom very little of which appears to have been saxon by the sixth century a series of regionally distinct identities that can be regarded as separate ethnic groups had developed which corresponded very closely to those that had emerged during the late prehistoric and roman periods these ancient regional identities survived through to the viking incursions whereafter they were swept away following the english re conquest and replaced with the counties with which we are familiar today this is the first book devoted to churches in ireland dating from the arrival of christianity in the fifth century to the early stages of the romanesque around 1100 including those built to house treasures of the golden age of Irish art such as the Book of Kells and the Ardagh Chalice. Carragin's comprehensive survey of the surviving examples forms the basis for a far-reaching analysis of why these buildings looked as they did and what they meant in the context of early Irish society. Carragin also identifies a clear political and ideological context for the first Romanesque churches in Ireland and shows that to a considerable extent the Irish Romanesque represents the perpetuation of a long-established architectural tradition.
